When it comes to SEO, not all content is created equal in Google's eyes. YMYL (Your Money or Your Life) represents one of the most challenging categories to rank for in search results.

YMYL refers to content that Google believes could significantly impact a person's financial stability (investment advice, loans, taxes), health and safety (medical information, weight loss, nutrition), or future happiness and wellbeing (major life decisions). Google applies exceptionally high quality standards to this content, requiring higher domain authority, stricter E-E-A-T standards, and more authoritative sources than typical content. See also: What is E-E-A-T?

💡 It doesn't matter if you, your client, or anyone else thinks content is YMYL. What matters is whether Google classifies it as YMYL. This classification happens automatically based on the search terms and topic.

How to Identify YMYL Keywords

Let's walk through a practical process for identifying whether a keyword falls into the YMYL category using a tool like Ahrefs Keywords Explorer.

First, enter your target keyword and ignore the "Keyword Difficulty" metric—it's essentially garbage for YMYL analysis because it only considers URL rating, not domain rating. Instead, scroll to the top 10 results and examine the domain ratings of ranking sites. This tells you the real story.

Note: YMYL keywords make domain rating requirements skyrocket. What might normally be achievable with a DR40 site could require DR90+ if Google classifies it as YMYL.

Real-World Examples

Take "how to lose weight"—a clear YMYL topic. When you check the top 10 results, the lowest domain rating is 91. That's not a typo. Every single site ranking has exceptional authority because Google considers weight loss advice as potentially impacting someone's health and life.

Similarly, "how to invest in the stock market" shows the same pattern with domain ratings in the 90s dominating the results. These aren't keywords you target casually—they require serious domain authority to even have a chance.

The Reality Check for YMYL SEO

If a client wants to rank for YMYL keywords and their domain rating is 30-40, you need to set realistic expectations immediately. Here's the truth: you can target these keywords, 💬 Client Communication: Be direct about the challenge. Show them the domain ratings of current rankings and explain why their DR30 site won't compete against DR90+ sites, no matter how good the content is.

Before targeting any keyword, always run this quick feasibility check: input the keyword into your SEO tool, review the domain ratings of the top 10 results, and compare with your website's domain rating. Only proceed if your domain rating is at least similar to those currently ranking.

If your domain rating isn't competitive for YMYL terms, consider these strategies:

- Focus on building domain authority first through non-YMYL content
- Target long-tail, less competitive variations
- Consider partnering with high-authority sites
- Build your expertise and authority gradually through consistent, quality content
