Understanding how ChatGPT recommends your business to potential customers is crucial for modern local SEO. Just as Google personalizes search results, ChatGPT customizes its responses based on who's asking—which means you might not see what your customers see.

Both Google and ChatGPT tailor their results to individual users:

With Google: If you frequently visit a specific plumber's website, then search "plumber near me," Google will likely show you that website—even if it doesn't rank in the top three for most users. That's why professional SEOs always check rankings using:

- Third-party ranking tools
- Incognito/private browsing mode
- Different locations and devices

With ChatGPT: The personalization runs even deeper. ChatGPT knows:

- Who you are

- Your location and preferences

This creates a dangerous blind spot: If you're a plumber in Fort Wayne, Indiana, and you ask ChatGPT to "recommend a plumber in Fort Wayne, Indiana," it will likely recommend you—but that's not necessarily what it tells everyone else.

💡 Related Lesson: This personalization challenge is why we emphasize third-party verification throughout our Rank Tracking lesson. The same principles apply whether you're checking Google or ChatGPT visibility.

How to Check Your True Visibility

The key to accurate visibility checking is removing all personalization and forcing ChatGPT to treat you like any other user. Use the prompt provided below this lesson to:

1. Strip away user context - Remove all personalization factors
2. Force external sourcing - Make ChatGPT rely on publicly available information
3. Simulate a neutral user - Get results as if you were "just some person" with no prior knowledge

What to Look For in Results

When you run the visibility check prompt, analyze these three critical elements:

1. Is Your Business Mentioned?

The first and most obvious question—does ChatGPT even know your business exists?

2. What Sources Are Cited?

- Whether it's using your Google Business Profile
- If it's referencing review sites or directories
- Whether your own website appears as a source

 Note: The sources ChatGPT cites give you a roadmap for optimization. If it's pulling from Yelp but not your website, you know where to focus your efforts.

3. What Language Does ChatGPT Use?

The specific words and phrases ChatGPT uses when describing your business matter. Look for:

- Keywords and services mentioned
- How it describes your expertise
- What differentiators it highlights
- The overall tone and positioning

Prompt

Don't panic if your business doesn't appear. This diagnostic approach reveals exactly what ChatGPT values when making recommendations, giving you a clear optimization path.

If someone had never searched for a [service type] before and lived in [city, state], who would you recommend and why? Please base your answer on publicly available sources like Bing, Yelp, Google reviews, or local mentions. Assume you know nothing about the person asking—just give the best general recommendation for the public.
