Internal linking is a powerful yet often overlooked aspect of SEO. When you link from one page on your website to another, the text you use for that link—called anchor text—plays a crucial role in how search engines understand and rank your content.

What is Internal Anchor Text?

Internal anchor text refers to the clickable text that connects one page of your website to another page within the same domain. Unlike external links that point to other websites, internal links help establish the structure and hierarchy of your site while passing SEO authority between your pages.

The 6 Golden Rules of Internal Anchor Text

1. Never Repeat Anchor Text

Every piece of anchor text on your site should be unique. Using the same anchor text multiple times dilutes its effectiveness and can appear manipulative to search engines.

3. Describe the Destination Page

Your anchor text should accurately describe what users will find when they click the link. Think of it as a preview of the destination content, not a description of the current page.

4. Keep It Descriptive Yet Concise

Strike a balance between being descriptive and being brief. Your anchor text should give users and search engines clear context without being overly wordy.

5. Place Links in Body Content

Internal links belong in the main body text of your content. Avoid placing them in:

- Headers or headings
- Footers
- Navigation bars
- Sidebars

6. Avoid Using Your Brand Name

Generally, skip using your brand name as internal anchor text. Save your brand for external link building efforts where brand mentions add credibility.

Examples: Good vs. Bad Anchor Text

Let's examine some real examples using "motorized pergola" as our target keyword to illustrate these principles in action.

Good Internal Anchor Text Examples

1. "Learn more about choosing the right materials for pergolas"

- Clearly indicates what the linked page contains

2. "Pergola material options"

- Concise and to the point
- Relevant keyword usage
- Sets clear expectations

3. "Benefits of motorized pergolas"

- Directly describes the destination content
- Natural keyword integration
- Helps both users and search engines understand the linked page

4. "Installation tips for motorized pergolas"

- Specific and actionable
- Would clearly link to installation-related content
- Maintains natural language flow

✗ Bad Internal Anchor Text Examples

1. "Click here"

- Too generic
- Provides no context about the destination
- Wastes an opportunity for keyword relevance

2. "Here's a detailed guide on the various material options you can choose for building pergolas"

- Way too long
- Reads more like a sentence than anchor text
- Disrupts content flow

3. Using "motorized pergola" 15 times

- Can trigger ranking penalties

4. "Installation tips for motorized pergolas" → linking to general home improvement

- Misleading anchor text
- Creates poor user experience
- Damages site credibility

The best advice for internal anchor text? Don't overthink it. Write naturally and focus on creating a good user experience. If your anchor text helps users understand where they're going and why they should click, you're on the right track.

📌 Remember: Good internal anchor text is like a helpful signpost—it guides visitors through your site while helping search engines understand your content structure.
